Teaching Parenting the Positive Discipline Way (developed by Lynn Lott and Jane Nelsen) is a research-based parent education program that provides a step-by-step approach to starting and leading experientially based parenting groups. This program stands alone or offers significant enhancement to any program. It provides experiential activities that reach the heart to inspire deeper understanding and change. Positive Discipline focuses on building a child's sense of his or her own capability, power to choose, and sense of self-worth. Parents love the Parents Helping Parents Problem-Solving Steps because this process provides a fun and effective way for them to get specific help with real problems. This training is meant for those searching for non-punitive methods to encourage and empower children and adults to develop valuable social and life skills. It may be of interest to:

- New and experienced parent educators who want tools, new ideas, activities, and enthusiasm.
- Family therapist who want to build skills in working with their clients.
- ESL leaders who want to share new parenting skills with their culture.
- Teachers and other school personnel who deal with parents, children and young people.
- Early Childhood Educators.
- Parents looking for help with children of all ages.
